BOW ISLAND, ALBERTA, FRIDAY, SEPT. 20, 1912

SUBSCRIPTION $1.50 A YEAR

A Mixed Farming Train for Bow Island.

Lectures will be Given by Experienced Men.

To demonstrate the manifold advantages of "mixed farming," the Alberta department of agriculture, in cooperation with the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific railways, will run a demonstration train throughout the province of Alberta during the months of October and November.

The trains will consist of one large wagon car containing grains, grasses, seeds and dairy display; a baggage car devoted to poultry; two car loads of pure-bred stock; two passenger cars equipped for lecture rooms; one sleeping car; one dining car and one sleep-and-dining car in all.

Accompanying the train will be a corps of experienced and capable lecturers and demonstrators, who will address the farmers on agricultural chemistry, animal husbandry, dairying, poultry and domestic science. Among the speakers will be Prof. W. J. Elliott of the Canadian Pacific railway, department of mining engineer, H. C. Cesig, superintendent of demonstration farms for the provincial department of agriculture, C. E. Lewis, superintendent of fairs and institutes, W. F. Stevens, provincial live stock commissioner; A. McKenny, provincial seed inspector; C. P. Marker, social director of the Canadian Pacific; F. E. Taylor, poultry experts and other noted specialists of international repute who are now being engaged by Hon. Duncan Marshall, minister of agriculture, who is at present in the east preparing for the opening of the new parliament.

This will be the first demonstration train in the province of Alberta, and no effort will be spared to make the tour successful. Similar trains have been organized elsewhere, and have received considerable interest and attention among the farmers. These trains bring the farmers' problems to their very door, as it were, and make it possible for him to obtain priceless knowledge without cost.

Stop of three hours' duration will be made at the following points on the Canadian Pacific:

Oct. 28 (Monday), Cochrane, 14k.
Oct. 29 (Tuesday), Langdon, 9k.
Bassano, 14k.
Oct. 30 (Wednesday), Brooks, 9k.
Caldalst, 14k.
Oct. 31 (Thursday), Irvine, 9k.
Wahala, 14k.
Nov. 1 (Friday), Bow Island, 9k.

[Taber, 14k.]

Preliminary arrangements are now being made at the places to be visited, where halls will be secured for lecture purposes and local requirements will be provided.

The demonstration train will be especially on schedule time and the "schools" as they are called, will commence promptly at the hours stated. The work will be divided so as to insure the best service for those desiring to hear in the best manner in the entire course.

The lectures will be brief and concise, being limited to absolute essentials.

Two carloads of pure-bred stock will be carried on the train, including breeding stock, and to demonstrate stock judging. Particular attention will be given to the live stock industry, and farmers will be advised as to methods of procuring and breed pure-bred animals.

It is hoped by those behind the movement that the farmers will turn out in goodly number to attend the lectures. The train will be run during the day when it will be possible for the farmers attending to travel over the prairie in which the train will be running, the advantage being that there will be less time lost than by visiting this train.

Wanted--A Hospital.

The rapid growth of Bow Island is bringing with it responsibilities of various kinds. Hitherto our needs have been met unflinchingly by the citizens, many of whom have given time, labor and money ungrudgingly in the interests of the town. Seemingly, with the completion of one task, another just as important, just as necessary to the requirements of the Municipality, pushes itself forward only to be taken up with equal zest and enthusiasm.

The need of a hospital, of course, has been felt for a very long time but very little has been done towards its erection. Now, however, the humongous need of hospital accommodation is a crying necessity.

Hospitals at Lethbridge and Medicine Hat find it increasingly difficult to cope with their own cases, and when these are added to by cases outside of their area it overtaxes their capabilities. The Bow Island district is a big one, and should easily support a hospital of its own.

The matter of erecting one in Bow Island will necessarily require considerable discussion and some sacrifice of time, but those who have given of their time and labor in other causes will not flinch when their assistance is requested in a matter of this kind. Of this we are convinced.

We would like to see a meeting called of representatives of the Town Council and Board of Trade and also of the various Ladies' Aids in the district. This is a matter that appeals particularly to ladies, because being mainly of a philanthropic nature their organizations would be of extreme value.

His Chance

What do you do when a lot of women work? Secretly quizzed the lady operator. Is there a man here, she continued, following her arms, that has a good quiet, downstair, made the fire, cooked his own breakfast, and kettle, and swept the kitchen and house? In a moment, and leaves him rise up. I should like to see if he is more than a boy and with mother, brother, father, gray and white hair, and the same color as the branch or the stone on which he sits that you would scarcely notice him.

"Every now and then he opens his mouth and gives the cry which you have."

"The whippoorwill fly about at night catching insects that would otherwise annoy us. The chick will's widow and the whippoorwill are birds that both look much alike and make the same cry that one sometimes is seen and while no longer than a week and with mother, brother, father, gray and white hair, and the same color as the branch or the stone on which he sits that you would scarcely notice him.

When going away from home, or at an evening party, he said, he was a wise man who among his belongings a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Cereals. Could he get water in some strange place where there are no doctors may bring along a bottle of water. This has been a standard remedy at hand with which to cope with the disorder, and foreseen difficulties, and it was the first time he had ever had a chance to assure himself.

The old man went on to say, "I am a grandfather again. Once there was a bad boy named Will who ate the eggs on the nests of birds, and one day he found two dull white eggs on the ground. They were marked with blue and had gray spots on them. The boy picked them up and started home with them in his hat. He had not gone far when he caught sight of a ploughman that he could not keep him from running away. He only turned slow faster. The father bird soon joined the mother, and both of them begged him to give them back the eggs. But we won't."

"He went home and told the house in which he lived that he had seen a whippoorwill fill all the neighborhood with what particularly naughty thing naughty Will had been doing."

And next day at school Will did not know his lesson, and the schoolmaster asked him why his father whipped him so and on till he wished he had never seen the bird's eggs. The whipplings came so thick and fast that they did him good. He left the bird's nest alone after that."

"A grandfather said he was only sorry there wasnt a whippoorwill like that for every bad boy who robbed birds' nests."

HOW POPULAR GROWS

Rate of Growth Studied in Canada and United States

The sapon poplar, frequently spoken of as the white poplar, is one of the most rapid growing trees in Canada at any rate in that portion of the Dominion east of the Rocky Mountains. It is a native of the northern part of the continent, and in the northern part of the Dominion it forms quite extensive forests especially in districts that have a great deal of rainfall. It is a place of some importance in the forest of the Dominion, although it is not a very large tree.

Some years ago (in 1905) the forestry branch of the Department of Agriculture sent out a circular letter to the Turtle Mountain Forest Reserve in Southern Manitoba, on which the poplar was found to be the most rapid grower. As a result of investigation the poplar was declared to be the most rapid grower in the country. It was estimated that if the poplar were allowed to grow to maturity it would be 100 feet high and 18 inches wide.

My mare, a very valuable one, was badly bruised and cut by being hit in the head by a horse. I was given a place in the forest of the poplar, and when I got home I found that there would be standing on each acre about 850 trees, of an average diameter of 4 inches, and a height of 18 inches high and the brim six inches wide.

Mark Cole, the first hatter in Montgomery County, Missouri, made a hat for William Logan which served Lord Baden-Powell well. The hat was made of 20 ounces of muskrat fur mixed with 13 ounces of mink fur, and held an ostrich feather. The brim was 18 inches wide and the crown was 18 inches high.

Conductor (to countryman)—If you saw him playing the fiddle when he was 100 years old, he would be 100 years old.

Editor—So it is. What's the matter?

Conductor—I thought you'd never ask. I'm afraid he'll be 100 years old.

Editor—Well, what further proof do you want?

Do you know football requires here such a gloomy-browed young man as he entered a sporting-goods store?

You may wrap me up a bottle of arnicas, a paper of court-plaster, a bandage, and a needle, and go along to play in a match this afternoon.

Conductor—It's a good idea, but I don't think that he'll be 100 years old.

Do you know football requires here such a gloomy-browed young man as he entered a sporting-goods store?

You may wrap me up a bottle of arnicas, a paper of court-plaster, a bandage, and a needle, and go along to play in a match this afternoon.

Conductor—It's a good idea, but I don't think that he'll be 100 years old.

Editor—Well, what further proof do you want?

The Picture

He "Played Fair" After All.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Ralph Evans lifted the drapery from the easel and gazed long and earnestly at the picture. There was a bitter pain in his heart that could not be banished from his mind.

It was an excellent portrait of Justin Moore—a speaking likeness, one might say, of the artist's closest friend, a man who had been a source of pleasure of feature that barely covered offence, but the mouth was strong enough to justify the penetrating gray eyes and the dark, wavy hair, the dark hair and the resolute chin.

The pity of it was that the beauty and magnetism of the face had hidden forever the personal details of a year ago, and the portrait, commented when he was vigorous with health, had just now come to light.

Alicia Moore, Justin's beautiful young widow, was coming to view it for the first time. During the period of her husband's illness she had been at her right hand throughout the dark days.

It was Alicia who had attended the funeral services, and the mournful details had been too much for her.

"To Ralph Evans she spoke freely of Justin and gave him, at first sight, all the warmth and without restraint her full confidence."

In the first sitting of sorrow the portrait had been thrust aside, but of fate Alicia had found a way to bring him back and to save him, so far as could favorably to complete it. Now it was finished, and Alicia was coming to view it.

As he stood there, his fine eyes meeting those of the portrait with a certain defiance, he was aware of Alicia's gaze as she came near him, and slender, in her black dress, eagerly tracing the well known features of the man she had loved ever before her, who she could, she felt, trust him.

"He has heard?" she asked.

The door of the studio opened, and Alicia Moore entered, trailing soft slippers behind her in the white. With a quick, graceful gesture she tossed back the crimp veil and glanced at the picture.

"You have finished it?" she questioned eagerly.

Without answering, Evans lifted an aged hand to touch the exquisite loveliness of her face. The pure texture of her fair skin, the deep blue of her dark brown eyes and the red glow of her lips, were reflected shrill beneath the sombre head covering.

"I am ready for inspection—I hope you will like it," he said hoarsely as she withdrew her hands from his and turned to the portrait.

For a moment he stood in rapid silence before it. Then tears filled his eyes, and her gloved hands were pressed against his bosom.

"Alicia, I am sorry. You have caught all the strength and nobility of expression. This is wonderful. Poor Justin!" The tears dropped unheeded on her cheeks.

Ralph strangled a desire to comfort her—to tell her to joy in the picture, for he knew that she was too young to spend the years in grieving over one who could not be recalled.

He was deeply grieved. "What would we do without him?"

"I am not fit to be at his feet, his life and love and happiness?"

"I am next to Justin in the depths, the depths," she murmured softly. "I shall hang in the library. Do you know, Alicia, you have made me very happy again."

She turned to him with outstretched hand and ringing lips.

The hands that were hers gripped the shoulders. In his mannerless silence and the bright freshness of his eyes—tautened her, and she withdrew her hands with a smile of reserve that Evans was quick to note.

"You can send it to me at once?" she asked.

"This afternoon if you will. I will send it by Sitterly. He will hang it for you."

"Thank you so much. No one but Justin's friend could have caught these intimate expressions." She smiled brightly at him through the tears.

After he had placed her to rest for a few moments he retired to the studio and locked the door. Ralph Evans went to the picture and studied it with dark, inscrutable eyes.

Suddenly he caught up palette and brush and added a few deft strokes to the pictured face of Justin Moore. Then he stepped back and gazed delightedly at the portrait.

It was still the portrait of Justin Moore, but possessed of his nobility and strength and sweet nobility. It was the portrait of Justin Moore, with every weak point emphasized.

Later that evening Ralph Evans sent the picture to the Bow Island window where Justin Moore's widow dwelt.

A week later he received a note from Alicia. "Come and dine with me," she wrote. "Bring your violin and we will have some music."

He went, and sat and quiet with unutterable sadness in her beautiful eyes, made him welcome in the library. His quick glance noted that Justin's piano was missing, and he asked if his old chair had been moved in front of it.

"You are not looking so well," he said. "I have been so spiritified," she confessed.

He was surprised. A familiar saying of Alicia's returned to him with startling suddenness. "A man can't play fair better keep out of the game."

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"You like the portrait?" he asked dubiously.

At first she flushed, and then her face went pale again, while she spoke it like a secret. "The violin had been given to me with the express condition that I should not give it away."

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"I have played fair?" Her hand clinched upon the table until the knuckles showed white. "You like the portrait?" he asked dubiously.

"Did you ever consider the difference between the portrait and the real person?" he asked.

"The first shows a preoccupation with the past."

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"That the picture of Justin Moore, which the ancient city of Cordova dominated, became at that time the busiest port in the world, and the center of the world which the world knew. More battles have been fought, more dynasties established or deposed, just here than in any other spot on the earth surface—than has the real character of—the person."

He panted breathlessly and looked at him with white, anguished eyes.

"I have been so spiritified," he said, with dry lips, but he knew.

She pointed to the portrait of her husband. "What do you mean?" she asked.

When King Kamehameha of Hawaii visited Japan many years ago he was very anxious to get to the Japanese emperor's court. He had no money, and when he saw his friend, Captain Moore, he asked him to loan him the sum needed to get him to the seat of power.

When he reached the Japanese court he was received with great courtesy, and was given a room in the Japanese residence.

"Now what?" prompted Ralph with a smile.

"William N. Armstrong, the king's attorney general, and his additional staff members, delivered the sum of one thousand dollars to the Japanese emperor, and were received with great courtesy, and were given a room in the Japanese residence.

"How come?" he asked.

"I have been so spiritified," he said, with a smile.

He turned to the portrait and back to the picture.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

THE BOW ISLAND REVIEW.

W. P. COTTON, PROPRIETOR
 BOW ISLAND
 Alberta

Representing a company, the identity of which has not been disclosed, says—The Hon. J. H. Kinnear, William Georgeon and Robert L. Shimmin of Calgary, are approaching the city of Winnipeg with a proposal for piping natural gas to be supplied to the city. Medicine Hat is also interested. Medicine Hat is to be supplied with natural gas at $10,000. They claim they can sell the gas there at 25 cents per thousand feet or just one fifth the present cost.

The Bow Island Council thought that it is more within the bounds of possibility for the gas to be piped from Bow Island than from Medicine Hat. Of course, the Bow Island Council has claimed the Bow Island gas field as being within its own particular field of influence. That, however, is as far as its interest goes, judging from the implicit (?) recognition which this town receives from it.

The Raymond Town Council has granted a sum of $775 to the Board of Trade towards the cost of sending an equit to the Dry Farming Congress. This grant is, however, conditional, that the Board of Trade raises an equal amount.

The matter of a Town Council giving a grant to help its Board of Trade along is one that ordinarily should not be raised, but little opposition from anyone but those who are not in our midst very well question the wisdom of giving grants to Boards of Trade which are famed into life for special occasions. Boards of Trade are of value only when they are engaged in acts of statesmanship, and by taking an interest in public matters make of such Boards the really useful and valuable organizations they should be.

It may possibly be of some little interest to the readers of the REVIEW to hear that the Bow Island and Taber example of Bow Island and Taber in the matter of licensing its businesses. With respect to the fees, however, Raymond has gone one, or rather, several, better than Taber. The former has to pay $100, if he keeps horses or machinery, the Raymond Council charges him another $100 for the privilege. Elevators have had their license fees elevated to the respectable sum of $100, while mills are charged $100. Banks have to discharge $100, and so on.

The officials of the Winnipeg Agricultural Society are fully optimistic about their opportunity this year. Never has Southern Alberta had a more recent prospect of success. The better grain and never has seen better breads and vegetables than are to be seen throughout this district. The Winnipeg people are coming in, they do not come in all day, they are holding the first Agricultural Show in a year when the quality of the exhibits are bound to be of first-class quality. That the show will be a success goes without saying. Apparently, the only thing left for the officials to do, is to make suitable arrangements for fine weather.

would have been a large one for Calgary to have carried alone, but doubtless Lethbridge, MacLeod and some of the other towns in the west would have been reluctantly persuaded to come in on the scheme. It's too late to make any effective move now in the way of getting cheap rates.

The Cool Stranger.
Business was still in the village when we entered.

"Any of you drive in a trap?" he asked causally.

"Yes," said Farmer Turnpike disinterestedly. "Why?"

Gray horse, and an old lady inside."

"That's right, but—"

Can she manage him all right?" said the singer.

"I think so, replied Turnpike.

Why, my wife's drove that horse even when she was a 3-year-old."

"Then," said the singer, "she's the stranger."

I merely asked because the gray has just met an old lady inside."

Like a bomb, and the old lady's hands clinging onto the back of the trap-screaming under her breath, if she can't manage him, there's nothing to get excited about. How's the price of taters down your way?"

The Oil of Power.—It is not claimed that the "Miracle" Bismarck Oil that it will cure every ill that may be looked upon as incurable. But it has been achieved that greatness for itself, and any attempts to surpass it have failed. The secret of its virtues is known to all who have tested its virtues and learn by experience.

Had His Doubts.

Harry Lodge once scored with a neat improvisation at a Scottish theatre. He had to play a man who had the audience were vehemently demanding more. Some of his admirers were very anxious to hear the songs they wanted to hear. One enthusiastic young man in a prominent seat, however, was determined to have a laugh. I love a laugh, he kept shouting. The genial comedian looked over his shoulder and remarked gravely: There is no doubt, my lad, if you did you'd have a laugh with her.

The Dangers of a Great City.

A young man had been born in Chicago and made a lot of money. Then he returned to the fatherland to take a trip to the Windy City. The old man, however, was not quite satisfied with what they had furnished similar digestive fragments, so long as the digestive processes perform their duty.

Friends were talking of success. A certain man who had made a fortune was mentioned.

"With what?" asked a man in New York a few years ago, one said, everything he possessed was tied up in a handkerchief.

The speaker smiled and stroked his closely-clipped beard.

"Tell me what you possess is tied up in his wife's name," he added.

A poor woman was telling a blind-hearing visitor how the doctor came and said she had a sluggish liver. What heals me, she added, is how then sugar gets inside the liver.

LOWER RATE IN INFANT DEATHS

New Zealand Babies' Women's Voices are Responsible for a Record

New Zealand is proud of its modern education—in advance of most of the world. Its people are schooled to believe that at any time they will come face to face with death, and that the best way to meet that is to be humorous in their boldness.

Here are the figures during the current infant mortality rate, as found in various nations for one year.

England and Wales 198
German Empire 170
Commonwealth of Australia 72
Provinces of Ontario, Canada, 131
New Zealand 72

The only country which attained to the low death rate without help of the women is New Zealand, where there women has a great influence, and gave a great interest in politics.

In the United States, however, not even allowed to stand a political platform, and they take no part in elections.

Jay Hodges, the New York lawyer, and after-dinner speaker, gave his advice to a young man who was thinking of taking up the study of law.

My young friend, said Hodges, I was once standing outside of a big office building, and was looking around and was lost in admiration of the musical and sinuous ways the men who worked there moved. I was struck by a middle-aged man who looked like an Irishman.

Good and Bad Humor.

Since both are very much under our control, we cannot escape the responsibility. We may more frequently display the latter than the former, but we can, if we desire, make ourselves agreeable to others or more agreeable to good humor.

Good humor is the best way to keep healthy. It gives us the capacity to enjoy every day, and every faculty without impediment. Good humor dispenses us to company with the distressed and to kindness to all.

I cannot conceive a person naturally disposed to bad humor.

Good humor enables us to look at things in the most favorable light.

Body language is the best offense. Bad humor is quite sufficient to make anybody unhappy.

There is also a blue, and like a sore place on one's arm, it is hurt by everything that touches it.

The person who wears it, is however, a spirit of general discontent and creates a spirit of general discontent and unhappiness.

If He Didn't.

This nervous gentleman, was perfectly certain it was in the wrong.

He was a little man, many, many times, reliable. There might be a reason for his nervousness, as the train steamed slowly out, he shouted to a porter standing by. Porter, what's the matter with you? You're not fit for the station!

The porter hurried an instant then, running alongside the train, and didn't look back until he reached the station.

It doesn't look for the bluest bump you've ever had in your life!

A Double-Barreled Escape

Miners are among the most heroic in the world. Danger is always lurking about them, and they are schooled to believe that at any time they will come face to face with death.

At one of the mines in Pennsylvania there was a cavewall which imprisoned a miner named Jack Thomas.

On the following Friday afternoon, and the fellow laborers of the entombed men set to work to free him.

Until Sunday morning, however, that the miners had been suffocated or struck his head through the aperture made by the pick-axes the rescuers screamed, Are you all right?

All right, came the reply, and then they were wondering what to do next.

Good! exclaimed Jack. I'm glad of what you say, but we must get out of here when the sun rises.

Examination Time

The eagle-eyed examiner was sure that the man was dead.

He turned to the master, bring your watch to me, Jones reluctantly handed over his watch to the examiner.

The experienced examiner found was a small steel plate past to the dial of which was fastened a wire.

He then removed the wire and placed the dial in front of his eyes.

Then he turned to the master again.

Now, bring your watch to me again,

he said, and the master did so.

Now, bring your watch to me again,
